

This is a sample document illustrating on-the-fly simultaneous definition and usage for glossary entries. This has drawbacks and it's really much better to define entries in the preamble, but you may find it useful for simple indexing.

Preamble definitions are much better, but here is a sample of what you can do.

The glossaries must come at the end of the document with this usage.

Commands can't occur in the label. The "name" key has to be used instead. Isn't this fiddly and not really worth the effort. May as well just define all the entries in the preamble instead.

The naïve phœnix sent off its résumé covered in pâté from the soirée.

The previous page presupposes the existence of phoenixes.
